ALLEGRO MODERATO

The Spring time is come, and the vine tree is blooming, And bow'rs that were leafless are waving with green. How chang'd is the val_ley where winter was glooming, When the Tagus roll'd sad 'midst the des_o_late scene. Come summer, sweet summer, with vio—lets and ro—ses', With birds singing sweet in the green myrtle shade; On thee, dear—est season, the fond heart re—poses, And thinks on thy sweets, tho thy beau—ties may fade.

My own native stream may roll on to the Ocean,
Cold, cheerless, and sad, midst the rude wintry gale;
But mark it in summer, each flow'ret's in motion,
As gently it passes, and sighs a farewell.
Come summer, sweet summer, with sunshine and gladness,
With all that is lovely, and all that is dear!
Then farewell to sighing, and farewell to sadness,
For peace and contentment will dwell with me here.
