The musical notation is organized into several systems. The first system includes a staff with rhythmic flags (vertical lines with horizontal bars) and a staff with letter-based notes. The notes are arranged in a sequence that corresponds to the Hypolydus mode. The second system continues the notation with more rhythmic flags and letter-based notes. The third system shows a more complex arrangement of notes and flags, including some that are grouped together. The fourth system features a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The fifth system shows a sequence of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The sixth system includes a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The seventh system shows a sequence of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The eighth system features a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The ninth system includes a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The tenth system shows a sequence of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The eleventh system features a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The twelfth system includes a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The thirteenth system shows a sequence of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The fourteenth system features a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The fifteenth system includes a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The sixteenth system shows a sequence of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The seventeenth system features a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The eighteenth system includes a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The nineteenth system shows a sequence of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated. The twentieth system features a series of notes and flags, with some notes being repeated.

The image displays a page from a manuscript, featuring ten staves of musical notation. The notation is a form of shorthand, using vertical strokes, horizontal lines, and some letters (like 'a', 'p', 'g') to represent musical notes and rests. The symbols are arranged in a grid-like fashion across the staves. The first staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The second staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The third staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The fourth staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The fifth staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The sixth staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The seventh staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The eighth staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The ninth staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them. The tenth staff has a series of vertical strokes, some with horizontal lines above them.

Handwritten musical notation on a page with 17 lines. The notation consists of various symbols, including vertical strokes, horizontal lines, and small letters (a, g, r, f, etc.) interspersed with the symbols. The notation is organized into four main groups, each containing multiple lines of symbols. The symbols are arranged in a way that suggests a sequence of notes or chords, with some symbols appearing above and below the main lines of notation. The overall layout is dense and characteristic of early printed musical notation.
