Conductor's Score

John-Luke Mark Matthews

If you are an experienced conductor with years of experience conducting large orchestras and choirs, you're not wanted here. Give the job over to someone who has never conducted before.

Your job is to conduct by consensus. However, you also have ultimate authority, which you may feel free to enforce arbitrarily.

If anyone challenges your authority, you may ban them and have them ejected from the orchestra or choir.

The performance can go ahead with whatever players and singers are left after the banning process.

Don't worry about looking at any of the parts, the librarian will take care of those. All you have to do is wave a stick. Or use your hands, if you think that'll look more impressive. Have fun.
